ROMANCE OF THE ELEMENT IN THAI STYLE

From THB 140,000++per package

(Offer is valid until 31st December 2019)

Thai wedding ceremony

Performed by three Buddhist monks, this traditional Thai ceremony begins with a sacred chanting followed by the blessing of the bride and the groom. Their heads are joined with the sai monkon string, signifying that, although their individual identities are retained, the couple's destinies are now linked. The Head Monk then pours blessed water on the heads of the bride and groom; the water is collected in a bowl of ornately arranged flowers. The guests of the bride and the groom also bless the couple on a water-blessing altar.

Long drum and symbolic gifts procession

The long drum procession is a traditional Thai parade, performed to celebrate joyful moments and occasions, especially weddings. The procession starts off with the musicians, drummers and dancers, dressed in colourful Thai costumes, parading through the resort to the bride's room. Enroute, the groom's friends and relatives join the procession carrying symbolic gifts. The bride and bridesmaids are the last to join the parade, which will end up at the wedding venue.

Planning your wedding reception can take a lot of effort and it all begins with deciding on the location of the reception and the type of reception. Decide on the type of reception you'd like to have from elegant sit-down dinner or cocktail party to other variants such as picnics or a beach reception.

• After Party

Any bride will tell you that the reception flies by. But the last dance doesn't have to signal the end of the celebration. There are always revelers who refuse to let the good times come to a close, so it's essential to have an after-hours game plan. It isn't just a way to prolong your wedding day (and you will appreciate every extra minute) consider it another chance to impress your guests with surprising details and personal touches. Here's how to get the party started.
